Session Descriptions

SESSION 1  11:15-12:15

Room 2480
Integrating Social Justice Practice in Student Affairs Curriculum: Learning Outcomes to Prepare Leaders in Higher Education. Brittany Manzer, Graduate Student/Interim Career Counselor, Cal Poly San Luis Obispo and Graduate Counseling Intern, Allan Hancock College; Amber Dillon, Graduate Student, Interim Academic Advisor and Study Abroad Advising Intern, Cal Poly San Luis Obispo. This presentation will discuss the integration of social justice learning outcomes within the curriculum of graduate programs preparing students for careers in counseling and student affairs in higher education. We will share specific learning outcomes and ideas for implementing these concepts that can include existing coursework, new curriculum or requiring relevant internships which meet the social justice criteria outlined. Conference attendees will learn how these social justice learning outcomes will strengthen new professionals’ ability to advocate for students by incorporating social justice objectives into their counseling style. Furthermore, we will present the benefits of incorporating social justice practice to strengthen graduate preparation and enhance the effectiveness of higher education professionals. Through this integrative training structure, professionals will be better prepared to serve the unique needs of students, communities, and institutions.

Room 1350
Healing of the Spirit: Going from Crushed to Creative in Native America. Cassidy Adlof, Graduate Student in Educational Leadership, California State University Channel Islands. The presentation will have four parts, giving the audience an overview of the social justice situation in Native America. First, an introduction will be offered about what is meant by the term Native America, including a brief talk about different types of Native American groups and the differences between those groups. This will be followed by a discussion of Native American history pertaining to US education policy (1800s to 1900s), demonstrating the crushed atmosphere that Native Americans have dealt with up until the late 1970s. The third part will be about healing of Native America and a look at the massive steps being taken to restore the Native American community. Finally, the presenter (a member of the Echota Cherokee Tribe of Alabama) will discuss her work within Ventura County promoting Native American cultures, pertaining to Native American stereotypes and culture clashes.

Room 1750
TEQUIO Youth Group: What’s Wrong with “Oaxaquita”? Arcenio Lopez, Alicia Angel, Samuel Corro, Arcadio Lopez, Israel Vazquez, José Luis Velazco, Rodrigo Zaragoza. The TEQUIO Youth Group will be sharing their background, how they got involved and why they named their group TEQUIO Youth Group. They will share their 2011 work plan with indigenous youth to help reduce stereotypes, prejudice, and discrimination against indigenous youth in schools, and to help increase indigenous pride in their heritage by promoting their rich culture and talents. There are now a large number of children from the Oaxaca and Guerrero regions of Mexico in the Ventura County school system who speak their primary indigenous language (such as Mixteco/Zapoteco). These children are subjected to discrimination and bullying by peers. As a result of these actions, many indigenous children are not doing well in school. They feel isolated and ashamed of their indigenous roots. The presenters will also discuss the inappropriate and insulting use of the word “Oaxaquita.”
Room 1756
Living Our Dreams: From “Disabled” to Creative. Amber B. Hardy, Santa Barbara County Education Office; Eileen Medina, Santa Barbara County Education Office; Matthew Medina, Owner, Taking Care of Business. This presentation addresses the issues of social justice and stereotypes in the field of education. Two of the presenters carry the label of “disabled” and have overcome others' perceptions of their abilities and proven that with the right support people can fulfill their dreams. Amber will speak about how her disability effected her school years and the perception others had of her during her school experience from the time she was in kindergarten through her college years. Matthew Medina, with the help of his mother, Eileen, will tell his story of a person receiving services through special education. Matthew now owns his own business, his own car and lives with a roommate who is non-disabled in his own home.

Room 1360
The State Budget: Who Cares? Maricela Morales, Deputy Executive Director, Central Coast Alliance United for a Sustainable Economy (CAUSE) and First Latina Mayor, City of Port Hueneme. Teachers, parents, and students either tune-out, get angry, feel fearful, or their eyes glaze over in confusion at the mention of the state budget. Often, along with the state budget come the word taxes. If we are to get out of the constant budget crisis that cripples public education, state budget and taxes have to be better understood. Low income and people of color are the most impacted by an unjust public education system and they are also less likely to vote. It’s clear, teachers, parents, and students feel crushed or are compliant and do not vote. Workshop participants will walk away with 1) general information on the root causes of the state budget crisis, 2) learn the statewide “power analysis” for budget reform and 3) know how they can be part of the creative effort to protect quality public education.

Room 2325
Rooting Students in Community Agriculture and Family Food Traditions for a Healthy Future! Erynn Smith, Join the Farm/The Abundant Table Educator; Alise Echele, Join the Farm/The Abundant Table Registered Dietitian; Katerina Friesen, Community Roots Garden Coordinator; Jennifer Dobbie, 1st/2nd Grade Teacher Blanchard Elementary School, Santa Paula. Presenters will utilize photos, videos, student work samples, and observations as they guide participants chronologically through the Rooted Futures program. This educational partnership program connects agriculture, community, food systems, and students’ home food traditions to restore a healthy relationship with locally produced food, native herbs and plants, and traditional medicinal plant knowledge, to form community around food. Participants will learn how the program was created to address a lack of access to farm-based and other land-based experiences for many of the farm’s neighboring low income schools. Presenters will weave together their lived experiences, and share how the program creatively addresses injustices in our food system.

SESSION 2  1:45-2:45

Room 2330
Anti-Discrimination Ally Empowerment: Forum Theatre Workshop. Norma Bowles, Artistic Director, Fringe Benefits Theatre; Kathleen Juhl, Southwestern University. Through discussion and the use of a variety of anti-bias and theatre exercises, participants examine discrimination in the abstract and how it directly affects their lives on school campuses. Forum Theatre is used by educators, grassroots activists, community members, and artists throughout the world to address a wide range of social justice issues. This theatre technique is designed to provide an opportunity for diverse community members to work together to explore and develop unique solutions to social injustices that directly affect them. Forum Theatre is used to practice constructive ways to act as effective and safe allies as we respond to and/or prevent discrimination. Fringe Benefits Theatre’s anti-bias exercises and discussion-prompts are grounded in the work of the Anti-Defamation League, the Leadership Development in Interethnic Relations, and the National Conference on Community and Justice.

Room 1750
Creative Interventions to Stop Bullying in Ventura County: A Service-Learning Project. Julia Balén, Associate Professor, California State University Channel Islands; Students in Introduction to LGBT Studies, California State University Channel Islands. Bullying is literally crushing many students in our schools – some via murder, some via suicide. Many more drop out early and fail to aspire for, much less reach, their potential because their schools and communities are not safe. Bullying can take many forms, but there are some forms it takes that tend to be pervasive and about which many educators seem uncomfortable – especially around gender and sexuality. This service-learning project designed as part of the Introduction to LGBT Studies class at CSUCI is meant to be a proactive step to engage participants to creatively address this issue together.

Room 1756
Empowering Students to Creatively Explore and Choose their Own Future. Jerry Beckerman, Founder, Segue Career Mentors. The presenter will engage participants as part of a social justice movement to benefit youth whose futures are at risk. How can most students choose a career when they don’t know their career options? Students with futures at risk don’t see the relevance of school to their lives; they too often become hopeless, give up, and drop out. Through Segue, students learn from live, caring people from the workforce who come to their classes that the choices are theirs to make. Students are supported to see that there is hope, that they needn’t be crushed, they needn’t give up or become compliant if they will take creative action now for their own benefit. Participants will experience and learn the critical importance of connecting a community with its school so students can be exposed to real-world, tangible and realistic options, become creative about their lives, see and create the possibilities for themselves, and step onto positive life paths.

Room 1350
“The Recovery Classroom”: A School-Based Multi-Agency Model at Pacific High School. Barbara, Boggio, Principal, Pacific High School, Ventura Unified School District; Karen Hartwell, School Counselor, Pacific High School, Ventura Unified School District; Kim Shean, Probation Officer, Ventura County Probation Agency. School based professionals and community partners will share and discuss a school based interagency program. “The Recovery Classroom” is a self-contained classroom at Pacific High School for juvenile court referrals of chemically dependent teenagers who have experienced risk-based behaviors and a negative school history characterized by a lack of belonging, poor relationships with adults, and feelings of discouragement. The program provides a safe, well-staffed, learning based, encouraging environment to support sobriety, provide health and mental health services and educate students to support their efforts to be sober, complete high school and provide job skills training or achieve post-secondary plans. It offers a consortium of support/treatment providers practicing an asset-based, holistic approach to care. Participants will learn how the creative leveraging of community resources provides students the opportunity to break the cycle of substance abuse and negative behavior.
Room 1360
The Secret Identity of the Dreamers Without Borders. Anahi Quiroz, Student, California State University Channel Islands. Many undocumented students have their dreams crushed every day because of their legal status. They do everything they can to continue in their studies, even in the face of family responsibilities, lack of access to basic needs, lack of job opportunities open to them when they graduate, and other hardships. The presenter will share her personal immigration story, through poetry and presentation slides, she will address contemporary issues of undocumented students in the U.S. She will ultimately raise the question: “Who is, and what makes someone an American?”

Room 2325
Storymaking: Engaging the Self and Others in Peace Education through Story. Claudia M. Reder, Lecturer Faculty, California State University Channel Islands. Storytelling is one of the tools of peace education. As storylisteners and storytellers, we engage in dialogue, and experience empathy. Through responding to and creating stories, participants will reflect on the difficulty of making choices and how to articulate those choices through movement, poetry, and/or art. Participants will listen to a story, experience story-making strategies, and create new stories. Diverse learners benefit from this approach that includes art, movement, and role play.

SESSION 3  3:00-4:00

Room 2330
Anti-Discrimination Ally Empowerment: Forum Theatre Workshop Norma Bowles, Artistic Director, Fringe Benefits Theatre; Kathleen Juhl, Southwestern University. Through discussion and the use of a variety of anti-bias and theatre exercises, participants examine discrimination in the abstract and how it directly affects their lives on school campuses. Forum Theatre is used by educators, grassroots activists, community members, and artists throughout the world to address a wide range of social justice issues. Fringe Benefits Theatre’s anti-bias exercises and discussion-prompts are grounded in the work of the Anti-Defamation League, the Leadership Development in Interethnic Relations, and the National Conference on Community and Justice.

Room 2480
A Critical Look at the School Counselor’s Role in Social Justice: Ventura County School Counselors Association. Diane Vasquez, Debbie Freeman, Pat Birkhead, Andre Vasquez, Joan Oliva, and Cheryl Meyers, Board Members, Board Members of the Ventura County School Counselors Association. The Ventura County School Counselors Association will present a short history of the organization and facilitate a “roundtable” discussion on the role that school counselors play in promoting social justice. In today’s political and fiscally strapped educational system not just counselors, but educators in general have been forced to make some critical choices: allow themselves to be crushed, settle for mediocrity (be compliant), or get creative on how to still provide critical services for our students. Participants will engage in a critical discussion on how educators can and often do sow the seeds of positive change.
Room 1756
Community College: College Choice for Undocumented Students. Mariadelaluz Flores, DREAM Club Advisor, Oscar Rodriguez, DREAM Club President, Cynthia Montero, Club Member, Blanca Gonzalez, Club Member. According to the research, 65,000 undocumented students graduate yearly from U.S. high schools. Undocumented students are not eligible for federal or state financial aid. As a result, undocumented students are more likely to begin their postsecondary education at a community college. The Oxnard College DREAM Club, formed in 2010, provides a social support network to undocumented students on campus. The presenters will show how club members connected with campus staff and administration for support, guidance, and information. They will show a clip from an AB540 Forum, describe the creating of the DREAM Team Academy project, show how social media helps promote the club, and share lessons learned.

Room 1350
Underrepresented Students in Study Abroad Programs. Antonio F. Jimenez-Jimenez, California State University Channel Islands. Even though 260,327 U.S. students studied abroad for academic credit in 2008/09 (a number that has doubled over the last past decade), only 19.6% of these students were non-white. If the number of underrepresented students is far from being adequate in American universities, their presence in study abroad programs is even more limited. Study abroad has been traditionally perceived as an opportunity only within the reach of wealthy students, who normally specialize in some area within the humanities. Although this depiction is far from being accurate nowadays, this prototypical image is engrained in the student psyche. This presentation seeks to clarify misconceptions about study abroad, family ties, financial constraints, and cultural expectations. Participants will be engaged in ways to creatively advise underrepresented students regarding opportunities available to them on campus and overseas.

Room 2325
Value-Added Assessment: Investigating Teacher Evaluation. Maureen Reilly Lorimer, Assistant Professor, California Lutheran University; Jennifer Ardy, Jaime Benedon & Lisa Lewis, Pre-Service Teacher Candidates, California Lutheran University. Presenters will present their findings from an investigation on Value-Added Assessment (VAA). Although VAA may present interesting statistics, it is also perceived as an imprecise gauge of whether teachers and schools are producing the desired results. Further, it does not identify underlying factors that may exist. Because these teacher candidates believe the public may not fully comprehend the impact of VAA, they advocate the creative/proactive approach of educating ourselves and others. In doing so, we become empowered to advocate for multiple assessments that authentically support effective learning for diverse populations. Participants will gain background knowledge about VAA and its strengths and weaknesses and learn about this critical issue’s influence on learning and teaching.

Room 1360
Framing Culturally Relevant Pedagogies for Mixtec Indigenous Mexican Migrant Students. Verónica Pacheco, 2nd Grade Teacher, Art Haycox Elementary School, Hueneme School District. This presentation addresses issues of social justice in public education as it investigates Mixtec students and their access to academic achievement. For schools to ensure Mixtec students receive a quality education, educators must comprehend the context of their existence. Documenting the voices of Mixtec students and families, findings from this doctoral dissertation offer responses to three specific questions: (1) What specific cultural experiences do culturally relevant educators need to build on and consider when preparing lessons for Mixtec students? (2) How can culturally relevant educators enhance home-school relations with Mixtec families? and (3) Are there unique challenges that might interfere with the academic achievement of Mixtec students?
